

U.S. Response to the Venezuela Regional Crisis

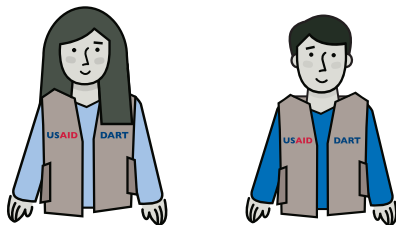

Venezuela is experiencing a political and economic crisis—marked by devastating hyperinflation—that has led to severe food and medicine shortages and has driven nearly 3.4 million people to flee the once-prosperous country. The United States is providing humanitarian and development assistance throughout the region to meet emergency needs, stem the spread of infectious diseases, and build countries' long-term capacity to respond to this crisis.

More than $256 million

in humanitarian and development aid provided to:

USAID Disaster Assistance Response Team

This elite team is on the ground throughout the region conducting assessments, identifying priority needs, and coordinating the U.S. Government's response efforts.

USAID
FROM THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

U.S. Humanitarian Assistance Provided:

Community
Kitchens

Food
Vouchers

Relief
Supplies

Mobile Health
Clinics

Medical Staff
& Equipment

Child-Friendly
Spaces

Vaccinations
& Disease
Surveillance

Water, Sanitation,
& Hygiene

Livestock,
Seeds, & Tools

Mobilizing Aid to Venezuela

The United States is prepared to provide more than $20 million in humanitarian aid to the people of Venezuela, and has pre-positioned relief supplies in Colombia, Curaçao, and Brazil so they are ready to reach Venezuela as soon as possible.

